

Characterization of the ECG Parameters Using Principal Components Analysis

Adriana CHIŞ

Abstract

The purpose of this paper was to study the performances of one of the newest methods of analysis used in the domain of signal processing, PCA (Principal Components Analysis), and the possibility of using this method for the characterization of the ECG parameters. The paper proposed and implemented some algorithms for the detection and extraction of the ECG parameters, and principal components analysis was performed upon these parameters.